problems. Users can also look up related tutorials and topics to offer advice for other people. The Adobe Help Forums are an open community forum where online users can ask questions and seek help. Visit www.photoshop.com/support. Installing Photoshop CS6

The installation process for

Photoshop Creative Suite 6 is straightforward. It can be done in several ways, including using the disc that came with the software, a serial number, or an Internet download. Installing the Disc version The first thing to do is insert the Photoshop CS6 disc. The disc is usually provided with the software.

The installation path varies by operating system, but just look for the installer on the CD and follow the instructions. If you need help, check out the YouTube link listed at the end of this section. (Alternatively, you can visit www.adobe.com/support/photoshop/gs6/installation.html.) If the disk is not included with your software or is damaged, the CD you need can be purchased at www.adobe.com/store/photoshop. Installing the Serial number version If you prefer to have the software on the Internet, you can download the installer from www.adobe.com/photoshop/installer. Save it to your hard drive and run it to install the software. If you don't have your serial number handy, visit www.adobe.com/support/photoshop/serialnumber.html for a link to download it. Installing through the Internet version

The third option for installing Photoshop Creative Suite 6 is through the Internet. Adobe provides an on-demand installation method that offers several installation options. Visit www.adobe.com/support/photshop/gs6/install.html for details. You also have the option to receive an activation code instead of a serial number. Contact your Adobe representative or visit www.adobe.com/support/pho

Q: Why do some cashiers take great pains to encourage me to be a good customer by not checking out until the very end of the store? I'm an avid shopper and I generally find one store that I spend most of my time at. Many cashiers take such great pains to recommend products to me, many of which I know I'm going to buy anyway, that the bonus is huge. My dilemma is, I have to see the other items that they are suggesting I buy, which makes me nervous, because a) they will charge me for everything at once, or b) they will take a very long time. In either case, I know that I'm going to buy the product, so why are they trying to make it so that I will buy more than I want to? Is there a way around this? I just don't want to go in there, pick up my items, and make purchases.

A: It may be over-riding their desire to increase business.

And you're right, the potential risk is not just the charge, but any time you are in the store, they will be giving you time to browse and find something else, as well. A related situation: on a roller coaster, you are supposed to hold onto your hands, or risk flying off. A: Your first option "not check out until the very end of the store" is a perfect way to harass you at the end of a long shopping trip, and therefore prevent you from just leaving the store. They could offer you more time to browse. (In the US, at least, I was generally offered a discount if I did that.) They could try to get you to buy food or anything else, and you might just think about what you really want. Also, while you're thinking "gosh, this is a great gift idea for someone, but if this one is on sale, I can get it more cheaply elsewhere", they can flip through their register slips and get a discount on the cash for that purchase, instead of giving you an extra discount on the other item

(or ignoring it completely if you don't buy it at that time).

A: There is nothing wrong with this behavior if the purpose is to make a little extra money. I've never known a store to discourage this behavior, the only case I know of is a gas station with one pump that is in constant use,
