On Saturday, officials from the retailer visited a local chapter of Toys for Tots, a national charity that distributes toys to needy children during the holiday season. "It is an honor to spend the morning playing with the kids and talking to Toys R Us employees who will be assisting Toys for Tots for the 20th year in a row," said Beth Bolduc, chapter president of Chicopee TOTS chapter 569. The charity, which started in Iowa in 1984, works with about 200,000 families across the country. Toys R Us celebrated 20 years in business in November, 2015, which brought a couple of its biggest players to UMass Lowell in November 2016. The company's CEO, David Brandon, was the keynote speaker at the university's symposium on entrepreneurship, and the company held a series of local events in the city. In 2008, to celebrate the company's 20th anniversary, Toys R Us donated $500,000 to the department of school administration and charged all guests free meal and snack during the company's annual shareholders meeting. Since its IPO on Nov. 14, 2000, Toys R Us has added two distribution centers in Massachusetts, as well as several other locations in New England. The chain saw $5.7 million in revenue in the state last year, according to the state Department of Revenue. The company said those stores contributed $2.5 million in the state in 2016. The retailer has also seen an uptick in its market share, while Walmart has lost millions of customers to international and online competitors. Brandon, who will step down as CEO in January, announced in April that he was joining the private equity firm Kohlberg Kravis Roberts, one of the world's largest private equity firms. Brandon, who was Toys R Us' chairman and CEO since 2007, is leaving the chairman role and will be replaced by Frank Demaria. Demaria was previously senior managing director and head of Toys R Us' U.S. operations.
