Police of Indonesia's Papua province caught a man with 13 live, dead pigs slung over his back and then tried to make it look as if he was a farmer. A man set out with 13 live pigs and 10 dead pigs on a donkey and made his way about 80 kilometers (50 miles) from the northern province of Papua to the provincial capital of Jayapura, local police reported. The man was identified as Arie Kol, 40, a local farmer who was traveling to Jayapura for a live pig market. Following an inspection by police, they found that Arie had killed and laid out all of the live and dead pigs in the back of his chariot. In 2005, we set out to audit the extent to which the UK fulfils the WHO criteria for patient safety in surgery. There is, however, no established structure or methodology by which patient safety in surgery may be audited. We prospectively reviewed the outcomes of 216 consecutive patients undergoing colorectal operations in a single surgeon's practice over a 26-week period. The protocols, procedures and outcomes of these patients were recorded. The Audit of Patient Safety in Colorectal Surgery (APSCOS) Index was then formulated and prospectively audited over a 12-week period. Of the patients followed up in the study period, 18 patients (8.3%) sustained postoperative complications of varying severity and the average time to recovery from anaesthesia was 3.7 days (sd=2.5). Seven patients (3.3%) sustained a 'never event' (defined as any mishap that would not have happened if safety procedures had been strictly adhered to). The APSCOS Index calculated a mean value of 0.90 (sd=0.07) in patients who were discharged from hospital and 2.01 (sd=0.37) in patients who died in hospital. The APSCOS Index correlated significantly with the Patient Safety Indicators (PSI) index. However, it does not correlate with the human factor index. Our study has identified a significant number of adverse events after colorectal surgery. It describes for the first time a means by which patient safety in colorectal surgery might be audited in the UK. To our knowledge, this represents the first national audit of patient safety in surgery.Large-scale production of UFT (tegafur-uracil) caused by an abnormally appearing cell.
