Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, First Department, reversed, on the law, the judgment of the County Court (Klinger, J.), unanimously affirmed. Nitric oxide-mediated modulation of the endothelial permeability. The endothelium controls vessel permeability via a controlled barrier function. By producing and releasing nitric oxide (NO) the endothelial cells become involved in this barrier function. The NO, which is produced from L-arginine by a series of NO-synthases, has two opposing effects on the endothelial barrier, an improving effect on endothelial permeability through stimulation of the production of cyclic guanosine monophosphate, the final product of NO-synthase activity, and a damaging effect on the barrier function, mediated via the activation of nitric oxide synthase (NOS) and the production of peroxynitrite. Most of our knowledge on these physiological mechanisms is based on studies in which NO was administrated pharmacologically by means of donors and donors of nitric oxide synthase (NOS) and nitrates. In these studies, NO donors improved the barrier function of the endothelial cells, and nitrates impaired barrier function. However, the physiological importance of these two opposite effects of NO on the barrier function of the endothelial cells is unclear. Interestingly, recent studies using in vivo models, have shown that
