I have been trying to do a setup for HA with a mongoddb cluster running in 3 different node. I have used the 3.2.2 version of mongo and cql. However i have noticed that we have to have identical versions for all the 3 nodes even if they are using the same version of mongoddb. I have read that Cassandra supports multiple versions but was not able to find an answer. Does the version of mongoddb server used for Cassandra matters? Can any one please tell me the basis of what i have read? Thank you. A: When you run cqlsh you need to specify the version in order to connect to the correct cluster. This would also be the case when running cassandra. You can try to use a different terminal tab to connect to the different mongoddb servers, and use the same version of cqlsh. Does the version of mongoddb server used for Cassandra matters? No, but it will be the version that all your applications are using. You can use the following command
